TEACHING COMPOSITION.

(Paper read by A. E. Small at the Teachers' Convention held at Green's Landing, Feb. 1, 1894.)

Weister defines Composition in literature as the act of inventing and combining ideas, clothing them with words, arranging them in order, and in general committing them to paper.

This art of composition is not by any means a modern accomplishment. It was one of the first acquired and made use of by the human race.

Composition does more to prepare a pupil for success in many departments of life than any other branch, and also affords a valuable training to the mind, for it requires a closeness of observation, fullness and readiness of memory, and the power of original thought and invention.

It is a fact that most of the pupils in our schools are not properly prepared to do this work, and that the subject of composition has been and now is sadly neglected in the majority of the public schools of Deer Isle.

First—That we shrink from introducing as a study in our schools a subject which has not been customary for teachers to devote much time and attention in past years.

Second—The grammars now in use require scarcely any composition work in connection with the study of language.

Third—The pupils in our schools are not properly prepared to do this work, and that the subject of composition has been and now is sadly neglected in the majority of the public schools of Deer Isle.

Fourth—The pupils in our schools are not properly prepared to do this work, and that the subject of composition has been and now is sadly neglected in the majority of the public schools of Deer Isle.

Fifth—The pupils in our schools are not properly prepared to do this work, and that the subject of composition has been and now is sadly neglected in the majority of the public schools of Deer Isle.

Sixth—The pupils in our schools are not properly prepared to do this work, and that the subject of composition has been and now is sadly neglected in the majority of the public schools of Deer Isle.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic for the Week Beginning Feb. 25. Comment by Rev. S. H. Thompson.

Topic—Giving our best to God. Mark xii, 33:44.

The subject of giving is constantly emphasized in our text. This is as it should be. Christianity is a constant receiving, which should always be accompanied by a willing giving.

John Ames is at home to help the sick. Mrs. J. F. Combs of Sargentville, is at Miss N. S. Blake's.

A big flock of snow buntings flew over today. What the sign?

School at the Creek finished last week. No doubt it will be the last ever taught in the old school house, for now the town system is ripe.
